

Research Brief for Eye Care Practitioners: prevalence of childhood myopia

A worldwide epidemic?

The following figure highlights the prevalence of pediatric myopia by country and age group (6-13 years vs. 13-19 years).

1. He M, et al. Refractive error and visual impairment in urban children in southern China. Invest Ophthalmol Vis Sci 2004;45:793-799.
2. Laatikainen L, et al. Refractive errors and other ocular findings in school children. Acta Ophthalmologica 1980;58:129-136.
3. McCullough SJ, et al. Six year refractive change among white children and young adults: evidence for significant increase in myopia among white UK children. PLoS ONE 2016;11.
4. Rose KA, et al. Outdoor activity reduces the prevalence of myopia in children. Ophthalmol 2008;115:1279-1285.
5. French AN, et al. Risk factors for incident myopia in Australian schoolchildren: the Sydney adolescent vascular and eye study. Ophthalmol 2013;120:2100-2108.
6. Yang M, et al. Myopia prevalence in Canadian school children. Optom Vis Sci 2016.
7. Lin LL, Shih YF, Hsiao CK, Chen CJ. Prevalence of myopia in Taiwanese schoolchildren: 1983 to 2000. Ann Acad Med Singapore 2004;33:27-33.
8. Vitale S, et al. Increased prevalence of myopia in the United States between 1971-1972 and 1999-2004. Arch Ophthalmol 2009;127:1632-1639.
9. Williams KM, et al. Prevalence of myopia in an adolescent British cohort and cognitive associations during childhood. Invest Ophthalmol Vis Sci 2014;55(13):3628.
10. Jang JU, et al. The status of refractive errors in elementary school children in South Jeolla Province, South Korea. Dove Press 2015:45-51.
11. Jung SK, et al. Prevalence of myopia and its association with body stature and educational level in 19-year-old male conscripts in Seoul, South Korea. Invest Ophthalmol Vis Sci 2012;53(9):5579-83.